ATHERTON

Street Chic

After years of hunting down unique jewelry for herself, Susie Fox decided she was on to something. "I would get stopped on the street to have a bracelet purchased right off my wrist," says Fox. In 2005, the Atherton designer launched her eponymous custom collection, and her first trunk show in Woodside ended without a single bauble left. Continuing to sell by private appointment only, Fox attributes the ethnic flavor of her collection (gorgeous emeralds from South America and African antique ivory) to a childhood spent with antiques dealer parents in vintage shops and auction houses around the world. *From $600-$50,000; susiefox.net. BEYOND BARBIE

The Valley of the Dolls brings Japanese sensations like Blythe and Pullip to fanatic L.A. collectors. But one doesn't have to be a doll enthusiast to appreciate the doe-eyed beauties sporting runwaysque styles. thevalleyofthedolls.com. A.S.

THE NEW HYBRID

"When I was five, I got my first dirt bike. And 50 feet later, I got my first stitches, but I've been hooked on motorcycles ever since," says Derringer Cycles owner and designer Adrian Van Anz, who builds the shop's eye-catching two-wheelers completely by hand. Retailing around $3,500, a Derringer includes the new 4 Stroke Honda Engine, a multitude of color options, a coordinating vintage-inspired helmet and a monogrammed gas cap. Van Anz, who also owns the popular customized tech company AVA Computers, encourages collaboration with his customers on the design of their bike. And it doesn't hurt that he promotes green transport. "Customers look at my bikes and think vintage, sexy and fun—then I say, 'It also gets 150 mpg.'" derringercycles.com. VICTORIA NAMKUNG
